A good wine is one of the most vivid expressions of the nature of the land on which it appears and of the people who give it life. The Georgian culture and Georgian wine emerge almost simultaneously, and since then they have been intertwined like a vine and a supporting column. Undeniable proof of this are the stones of the cultivated grape vitis vinifera sativa, found during archaeological excavations and dating back to the 7th - 6th millennium BC , as well as big clay jugs Kvevri for fermenting wine, which date back to three or four thousand years. Many etymologists believe that the very word “wine” comes from the Georgian word “ghvino”.

GEORGIAN FOLKLORE AS THE EIGHTH MIRACLE OF LIGHT

Any culture, as a historically formed phenomenon, is the result of a thorough selection of traditions and expressive means and creates an accomplished artistic system. At the same time, any culture always has a national coloring. The Georgians belong to the race of those ancient peoples who, in spite of the hardest historical cataclysms, not only created original culture but carried it through the centuries and preserved its vitality and vigor.

ART OF SINGING

One of the peaks of the Georgian folklore art is its art of singing. Georgian people in spite of their long-suffering history always cherished and tenderly preserved their age-long musical language, as they considered that losing or degrading it was equal to losing and degrading their mother tongue. The Georgian folk music, distinguished for its many original and unique qualities, attracts particular attention of specialists.

"CHAKRULO"

All the characteristic features of mentality and nature of Georgians are clearly shown in the dance "Kartuli" : the nature of a Georgian woman-tender, refined, full of awe and high moral virtues; the dignity of the man is emphasized his respect for the woman, his manliness and chivalry. For a foreign eye, Georgian dances remind action scenes from Hollywood, saturated by special effects. In reality, all this is incredibly realistic. Georgian folk dances are highly appreciated all around the world, therefore, Georgian ensembles with their show programs and concerts, visit numerous countries throughout the year.
